

Tell the REAL STORY of health care in your country

Are health services in your country of good quality ?

Do people have to pay for health services when they need them ?

Do certain groups of people struggle to access health services ?

The State of UHC Commitment

Many countries are taking real and measurable steps forward to achieve universal health coverage (UHC).

To better understand this, UHC2030 is producing a multi-stakeholder review called the State of UHC Commitment with hard data about how governments are delivering on their commitment to UHC.

Along with hard data, we want to tell the real stories of how people access health services, and what the quality of these services are like.

We invite you to share your observations, anecdotes and materials that tell the real story of health care in your country.

Please make the stories detailed and human, anonymize those involved if necessary, and, above all, keep them truthful, whether positive or negative.

All your stories and experiences, however they are articulated, whether from a country, organization, community or group are valid and important.

We will compile them and use them in our global synthesis report, but also in individual country profiles, which anyone will be able to use for national advocacy.

The State of UHC Commitment

In September 2019, world leaders endorsed the most ambitious and comprehensive political declaration on health in history, committing to achieving UHC in their countries by 2030. This means that everyone in every country should receive all the quality health services they need without suffering financial hardship. Commitments in the political declaration call for action in the following areas for moving together to build a healthier world.

Ensure political leadership beyond health

Leave no one behind

Legislate and regulate

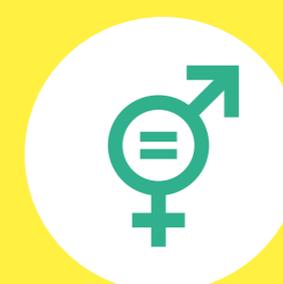

Uphold quality of care

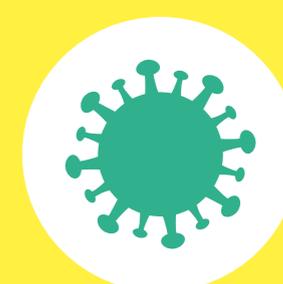

Invest more, invest better

Move together

Gender equality

Emergency preparedness

WHAT? The State of UHC Commitment aims to provide a multi-stakeholder consolidated view on the state of global and country commitments to making progress towards UHC by 2030. The review is an annual publication consisting of both country profiles and a synthesis report. In 2020, the review will set a baseline of UHC commitments in all countries from which progress on UHC can be tracked in future years.

1. The online country profiles will provide a snap-shot of the state of individual country UHC commitments, centered around the key commitment areas of the UHC political declaration illustrated above. In 2020, COVID-19 related information will also be included to reflect the current global context.

2. The synthesis report will summarise the state of UHC commitment at both the country and global level through the lens of recent political circumstance in global health. In 2020, the report will focus on how the world has sustained UHC progress to date with the extraordinary challenges posed by the COVID-19 pandemic. It will share short stories from people demonstrating the reality of UHC on the ground.

HOW? The country profiles and synthesis report will collect and succinctly present available data from relevant databases which are listed on UHC2030's UHC Data Portal, a single interface for accessing selected UHC and health system data. UHC2030 will also be conducting an online survey to gather the stories and real perceptions of UHC from country-level stakeholders, particularly non-governmental actors.

WHY? We want to support national accountability and advocacy processes and ensure political leaders are held accountable to deliver on their UHC commitment. Our ambition is to equip civil society organisations, academia, parliamentarians, private sector and media with information to contribute to the formal accountability processes in their countries.
